is no random testing now due to the need to implement a formal plan to do so. There has not been time for such planning since the kiosk testing became available to the university on short notice.

Currently, classes will resume face-to-face after Thanksgiving, as it is argued that the SHSU community is transient already, and that the university has already experienced the impact of those kinds of exposures.

The policy offering guidance on travel is being revised, as the current policy is now out of step with the CDC. The hope is for this to be ready before holiday break. It is still recommended that those who travel by air over the break quarantine for the 14 days.

New Business.

Based on concerns expressed in Senate, Senators Baker and Duran volunteered to draft recommendations pertaining to a return after Thanksgiving, and for a return after spring break next semester.
